

Aleister Crowley

The creation of Caeiro and of discipleship of Reis and Campos seems, at first sight, an elaborate joke of the imagination. But it is not. It is a great act of intellectual magic, a magnum opus of the impersonal creative power.

For several reasons, purely material and of no interest at all, either in absolute or relatively to the present letter, January and February (or, at least, the greater part of February) will be unpropitious months for I may call an exact stay in Lisbon. But March will in every way be an excellent month. In March I can give time, both material and mental, to something, like your presence, really worthy of ~~such~~ such Time.

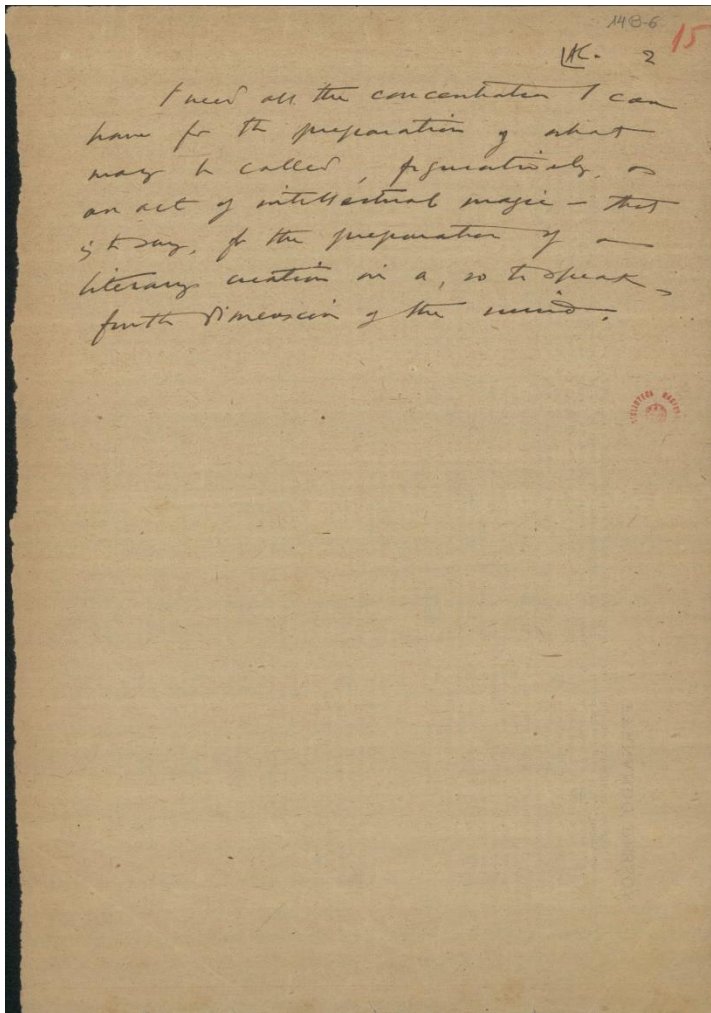

Interview in "Revista Portuguesa" - especially the end.

There is, however, a vague possibility of my having to go to France or even to England by that time or perhaps in February still. If so I shall let you know in advance, and it will facilitate our meeting.

I need all the concentration I can have for the preparation of what may be called, figuratively, as an act of intellectual magic - that is to say, for the preparation of a literary creation in a, so to speak, fourth dimension of mind.
