To G. K. Chesterton

I have always thought
you had not the right
to show many thoughts of your own. They are deep in so superficial
a manner of getting at having them, that I am shocked so alert a
manner of understanding should so minutely have lodged itself in your {...} laziness. You have no coherence, no
sequence, no
discipline. Why have you the materials then?

You are made of
suggestions, of nods
and links, sometimes of
those |*dogs on our
sides| that are peculiar to ~~those~~ Dickens' characters in the interior only by
muff.

Where do you get the
ideas you have no right to have?
