~~imaginative realistic. epix~~
Poetry is imaginative pure (epic, dramatic, elegiac, lyric).
Descriptive poetry is not imaginative scient[if]ic, because it is not a description of things
seen, but of the imaginative impression of such things. A description of things seen is not poetry, but, in verse, is horror.

That is to say, the interpretation must be imaginative, anterior to the vision in idea, however posterior in time.

I may mention that there is, properly speaking, no descriptive poetry. Descriptive poetry occurs in a poem in a passage - it does not form the "plot" of the poem.
